The field of sports and entertainment law is an area to be reckoned with domestically and internationally. Sporting activities now go beyond mere entertainment and socialisation. It is now an important aspect of commercialisation and development. Sports can also be viewed as a means of social integration and cooperation. Sports and entertainment law transcend national boundaries and have opened an array of opportunities for individuals and business enterprises. Wide ranges of services are rendered for the development of the ventures. There is the need to continue to develop the commercial practices of these areas to meet with the current state of affairs. It is also important that there is the regulation of the activities that are connected with the development of sports and entertainment in line with acceptable practices. Therefore, domestic and international norms have emerged in the sports and entertainment industry. The sports and entertainment industry can be said to be regulated by established and evolving commercial practices and usages, laid down codes of conduct and laws put in place at municipal, regional and international level. Therefore, sports and entertainment law is now established as a distinct field of legal practice and scholarship with lawyers being involved in legal research, rendering of legal advice, development of rules
